Creativity is seeing what everyone else has seen, and thinking what no one else has thought

Welcome to Praxis 7TH EDITION (2021)

Every year, the editorial board of Chalapathi Institute of Pharmaceutical Sciences (Autonomous) proudly presents its one-of-a-kind creation in the form of the annual magazine "PRAXIS," which serves as a platform to highlight creativity, art, fun, messages, and intelligence. It is an opportunity to collect and organise ideas worth sharing with the larger Chalapathi Pharmacy Community. We are delighted to welcome as many new authors as possible since their pieces will provide you with a plethora of different experiences, viewpoints, and writing styles to appreciate. We attempted to capture the pharmacy community and give a peek into daily life.

The PRAXIS team would like to express their heartfelt gratitude to all of the students who contributed to this issue. The editorial board would like to express its heartfelt gratitude to Sri.Y.V.ANJANEYULU Garu, Founder and Chairman of Chalapathi Educational Society, and Prof.RAMA RAO NADENDLA Garu, Principal of Chalapathi Institute of Pharmaceutical Sciences, for providing valuable suggestions and encouragement throughout the PRAXIS journey. All the thinkers, writers, cartoonists, artists can connect with us at clptpraxis@gmail.com. We are equally open to comments, criticism and suggestions.

Finally, we hope you appreciate this year's issue new designs. We are overjoyed by the enormous reaction and hope that it will continue. PRAXIS constantly welcomes student creative work that will result in the student's entire growth. This journal highlights the creative worlds of our pharmacy students as well as new concepts.

AN INSPIRATION

Jacinda Kate Laurell Ardern

Jacinda Kate Laurell Ardern was Born on 26 July 1980 in Hamilton. Ardern grew up in Morrinsville and Murupara. Her father, Ross Ardern, worked as a police officer and her mother Laurell Ardern worked as a school catering assistant. Her early education was carried out at State school in Morrinsville, later higher education at Morrinsville college and graduated with Bachelor of Communication Studies (BCS) in politics and public relations from the University of Waikato in 2001. She has been independent since her schooling where she worked at local fish and chip shop to start her earnings. she also worked as student representative on the school's Board of Trustees during her college days.

EARLY POLITICAL LIFE

Ardern was brought into politics by her aunt, Marie Ardern, a longstanding member of the Labour Party, who recruited the teenaged Ardern to help her with campaigning for New Plymouth MP Harry Duynhoven during his re-election campaign at the 1999 general election. Ardern joined the Labour Party at the age of 17, and became a senior figure in the Young Labour sector of the party. After graduating from university, she spent time working in the offices of Phil Goff and of Helen Clark as a researcher. Ardern was also seconded to the UK Home Office to help with a review of policing in England and Wales. In early 2008, Ardern was elected president of the International Union of Socialist Youth, a role which saw her spend time in several countries, including Jordan, Israel, Algeria and China.

Ahead of the 2008 election, Ardern was ranked 20th on Labour's party list. This was a very high placement for someone who was not already a sitting MP, and virtually assured her of a seat in Parliament. Accordingly, Ardern returned from London to campaign full-time. She also became Labour's candidate for the safe National electorate of Waikato. Ardern was unsuccessful in the electorate vote, but her high placement on Labour's party list allowed her to enter Parliament as a list MP. Upon election, she became the youngest sitting Member in Parliament, succeeding fellow Labour MP Darren Hughes, and remained the youngest MP until the election of Gareth Hughes on 11 February 2010. Opposition leader Phil Goff promoted Ardern to the front bench, naming her Labour's spokesperson for Youth Affairs and as associate spokesperson for Justice.

Ardern contested the seat of Auckland Central for Labour in the 2011 general election, standing against incumbent National MP Nikki Kaye for National and Greens candidate Denise Roche. Despite targeting Green voters to vote strategically for her, she lost to Kaye by 717 votes. However, she returned to Parliament via the party list, on which she was ranked 13th. Ardern maintained an office within the electorate while she was a list MP based in Auckland Central. After Goff resigned from the Party leadership following his defeat at the 2011 election, Ardern supported David Shearer over David Cunliffe. She was elevated to the fourth-ranking position in the Shadow Cabinet on 19 December 2011, becoming a spokesperson for social development under new leader David Shearer. Ardern stood again in Auckland Central at the 2014 general election. She again finished second though increased her own vote and reduced Kaye's majority from 717 to 600. Ranked 5th on Labour's list Ardern was still returned to Parliament where she became Shadow spokesperson for Justice, Children, Small Business, and Arts & Culture under new leader Andrew Little.

Ardern put forward her name for the Labour nomination for the Mount Albert by-election to be held in February 2017 following the resignation of David Shearer on 8 December 2016. When nominations for the Labour Party closed on 12 January 2017, Ardern was the only nominee and was selected unopposed. On 21 January, Ardern participated in the 2017 Women's March, a worldwide protest in opposition to Donald Trump, the newly inaugurated president of the United States. She was confirmed as Labour's candidate at a meeting on 22 January. Ardern won a landslide victory, gaining 77 per cent of votes cast in the preliminary results. During the 2017 general election held on 23 September 2017, Ardern retained her Mount Albert electorate seat by a margin of 15,264 votes. Preliminary results from the general election indicated that Labour received 35.79 per cent of the party vote to National's 46.03 per cent. After special votes were counted, Labour increased its vote share to 36.89% while National dropped back to 44.45%. Labour gained 14 seats, increasing its parliamentary representation to 46 seats. This was the best result for the party since losing power in 2008. After the election, Ardern and deputy leader Kelvin Davis negotiated with the Greens and New Zealand First parties about forming a coalition, as the rival National Party lacked sufficient seats to govern alone. Under the country's mixed-member proportional (MMP) voting system, New Zealand First held the balance of power and was, therefore, able to choose the party that would lead a coalition government.

ARDERN AS PRIME MINISTER:

On 19 October 2017, New Zealand First leader Winston Peters agreed to form a coalition with Labour, making Ardern the next prime minister. This coalition receives confidence and supply from the Green Party. Ardern named Peters as deputy prime minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs. Ardern is New Zealand's third female prime minister after Jenny Shipley (1997–1999) and Helen Clark (1999–2008). She is a member of the Council of Women World Leaders. Entering office aged 37, Ardern is also the youngest individual to become New Zealand's head of government since Edward Stafford, who became premier in 1856. On 19 January 2018, Ardern announced that she was pregnant, and that Winston Peters would take the role of acting prime minister for six weeks after the birth. Following the birth of a daughter, she took her maternity leave from 21 June to 2 August 2018.

Ardern intends to halve child poverty in New Zealand within a decade. Ardern opposes criminalising people who use cannabis in New Zealand, and pledged to hold a referendum on the issue. In September 2019, she was criticised for her handling of an allegation of sexual assault against a Labour Party staffer. Ardern said she had been told the allegation did not involve sexual assault or violence before a report about the incident was published in The Spinoff on 9 September. Media questioned her account, with one journalist stating that Ardern's claim was "hard to swallow".

On 15 March 2019, 51 people were fatally shot and 49 injured in two mosques in Christchurch. In a statement broadcast on television, Ardern offered condolences and stated that the shootings had been carried out by suspects with "extremist views" that have no place in New Zealand, or anywhere else in the world. She also described it as a well-planned terrorist attack. In response to the shootings, Ardern announced her government's intention to introduce stronger firearms regulations. She said that the attack had exposed a range of weaknesses in New Zealand's gun law. On 10 April 2019, less than one month after the attack, the New Zealand Parliament passed a law that bans most semiautomatic weapons and assault rifles, parts that convert guns into semiautomatic guns, and higher capacity magazines. On 15 May 2019, Ardern and French President Emmanuel Macron co-chaired the Christchurch Call summit, which aimed to "bring together countries and tech companies in an attempt to bring to an end the ability to use social media to organise and promote terrorism and violent extremism".

On 14 March 2020, Ardern announced in response to the COVID-19 pandemic in New Zealand that the government would be requiring anyone entering the country from midnight 15 March to isolate themselves for 14 days. She said the new rules will mean New Zealand has the "widest ranging and toughest border restrictions of any country in the world". On 19 March, Ardern stated that New Zealand's borders would be closed to all non-citizens and non-permanent residents, after 11:59 pm on 20 March (NZDT). Ardern announced that New Zealand would move to alert level 4, including a nationwide lockdown, at 11:59 pm on 25 March.

National and international media covered the government response led by Ardern, praising her leadership and swift response to the outbreak in New Zealand. The Washington Post's Fifield described her regular use of interviews, press conferences and social media as a "masterclass in crisis communication." Alastair Campbell, a journalist and adviser in Tony Blair's British government, commended Ardern for addressing both the human and economic consequences of the coronavirus pandemic.

Ardern has described herself as a social democrat, a progressive, a republican and a feminist, citing Helen Clark as a political hero. She has described the extent of child poverty and homelessness in New Zealand as a "blatant failure" of capitalism. Ardern advocates a lower rate of immigration, suggesting a drop of around 20,000–30,000. Calling it an "infrastructure issue", she argues, "there hasn't been enough planning about population growth, we haven't necessarily targeted our skill shortages properly". However, she wants to increase the intake of refugees. Ardern believes the retention or abolition of Māori electorates should be decided by Māori, stating, "have not raised the need for those seats to go, so why would we ask the question? She supports compulsory teaching of the Māori language in schools. In September 2017, Ardern said she wanted New Zealand to have a debate on removing the monarch of New Zealand as its head of state. Ardern has spoken in support of same-sex marriage, and she voted for the Marriage Amendment Act 2013 which legalised it. In 2018, she became the first New Zealand prime minister to march in a pride parade. Ardern supported liberalising abortion law by removing abortion from the Crimes Act 1961. In March 2020, she voted for the Abortion Legislation Act that amends the law to decriminalise abortion.

Referring to New Zealand's nuclear-free policy, she described taking action on climate change as "my generation's nuclear-free moment". Ardern has voiced support for a two-state solution to resolve the Israeli–Palestinian conflict. She has condemned the death of Palestinians during protests at the Gaza border. In mid-April 2020, two applicants filed a lawsuit at the Auckland High Court against Ardern and several government officials including Director-General of Health Ashley Bloomfield, claiming that the lockdown imposed as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic infringed on their freedoms and was made for "political gain". The lawsuit was dismissed by Justice Mary Peters of the Auckland High Court. On 5 May 2020, Ardern, her Australian counterpart Scott Morrison and several Australian state and territorial leaders agreed that they would collaborate to develop a trans-Tasman COVID-safe travel zone that would allow residents from both countries to travel freely without travel restrictions as part of efforts to ease coronavirus restrictions. Post-lockdown opinion polls showed the Labour Party with nearly 60 per cent support. In May 2020, Ardern rated 59.5 per cent as 'preferred prime minister' in a Newshub-Reid Research poll—the highest score for any leader in the Reid Research poll's history.

HONOURS:

- Ardern was one of fifteen women selected to appear on the cover of the September 2019 issue of British Vogue, by guest editor Meghan, Duchess of Sussex.
- Forbes magazine placed her at 38 among the 100 most powerful women in the world in 2019.
- She was included in the 2019 Time 100 list and shortlisted for Time's 2019 Person of the Year. The magazine later incorrectly speculated that she might win the 2019 Nobel Peace Prize among a listed six candidates, for her handling of the Christchurch mosque shootings. In 2020, she was listed by Prospect as the second-greatest thinker for the COVID-19 era.
- On 19 November 2020, Ardern was awarded Harvard University's 2020 Gleitsman International Activist Award.
- In 2021 New Zealand zoologist Steven A. Trewick named the flightless wētā species Hemiandrus jacinda in honour of Ardern.

Solutions to Problems in the field of Education to Empower Future Citizens

Once a wise man coined the core of education as "Education is the manifestation of the perfection already in man". This wise man, who was a monk, who preached equality and freedom and who was also a motivation for the youth just by his name, was none other than Swami Vivekananda.

Swami Vivekananda, as a preacher, had his own version of education system, which was very different in contrast to the present one. He wanted the mental, physical and spiritual flowers of children to bloom through education. He did not believe in education through books and insisted on vocational methods of teaching, which reaches to every student, and also is in terms with his level of understanding. He wanted the system to upskills self-discipline and self confidence in one.

According to me, the current framework should grow in a way, where every student gets to know his potential and skills. The approach of teaching should plant his potential and skills. The approach of teaching should plant respect towards the work, child is doing and should be engaging but not being merely materialistic. It should give room for children to explore their creative spot and also teach the application of what they have learnt.

I would like to conclude by saying that education should be the path which leads to the knowledge in one's mind, as shown by our great saint, Swami Vivekananda, and I assure that its fruits will be better future citizens.

A JOURNEY DOWN THE MEMORY LANE

The journey of a human being to being human is a collection of scenarios filled with experiences, values, smile, tears and conformations. All these scenarios are with us for just a short period of time and some of its components vanish gradually i.e. smiles fade and tears dry but the rest, stay with us as precious memories.

Memories are like the dots that make the picture of the past. These dots when recalled by joining them, influence our thoughts and ideas which will take place in the near future. Memories are just not moments that can be captured in photo graphs or films but are information or inputs from the past which come into action when we are dealing with the present and future obstacles. These then become memories and the cycle goes on and on.

I would like to share one of the recent experience of mine which took place in the initial stages of lockdown. When the lockdown was announced, the situation looked alien as it was a very different and a first hand experience. At this time we had to adjust ourselves to the change but in this process i observed a very disturbing scene where people were stifling to get the essentials they needed and to my surprise when I was observing this keenly, all the past memories of me taking the provided commodities for granted, was playing in my mind. This was the time when i realized that every product or thing that has done or the other utility and value shouldn't be taken as granted but rather we should be grateful for those and have some gratitude towards this. Till date this experience of mine has not gone from my mind as it has taught me the value and the need for these and how there are many out there who don't even have the immediate things needed for livelihood. It's just the respect that we have to give and look down upon anything or anyone because at least once in a lifetime there will be a situation where only there will be available to save us.

I would like to conclude by saying that memories are like the constitution or the reference guide for our life which guides us all times.

2 'o' Clock

We are the only bachelor's throughout the entire apartments. Myself shiva and my roommates Arun and Kalyan joined my room from the last 6 months. We three are searching for a job in sake of money even those are not for us! For our families who was living with retired pensions in very small villages.

Days are passing and one fine day door was knocking continuously. Arun went to see who was that and there we find a guy with short length haircut and with light brown bearded in police uniform. We are literally freezed there itself and asked sir! What's the matter? He replied "I came on investigating your opposite flat case." "Case! Sir that was a suicide right? Asked Kalyan with curiosity then he replied "No... it's a murder" with a vigorous voice. As we know that the family was very cool blessed with a girl child and even, we discuss why Mr. Sharma's wife has undergone a suicide. After all the enquiry we came to know that Mr. Sharma and his family doesn't have a girl child and who is that child and why this case turned as a murder? And mainly where is that child?

Me and Arun went to see Mr. Sharma who was a member of "Quit tobacco today committee". He was literally having a lot of sorrowness in his words. Kalyan went to his village every month and even went this time. We are being with Mr. Sharma all the time to search for his daughter. In this timeline we came to know that she was an adopted child.

One night Arun woke up suddenly at nearly 2'o clock with a lot of sweat throughout his body i have a water bottle I gave it to him and asked what happened? Then Arun replied "Shiva! From the last few month's, I'm having a same nightmare that Kalyan took the girl by killing her mom". Now we are in a confused state think so Kalyan is the accused one because even he was very close to that family but he didn't know that she was an adopted girl.

Suddenly police officer was dragging Mr. Sharma to his jeep we are surprised watching that scene from our window. We rushed to save Mr. Sharma and try to say about our roommate Kalyan. Then police officer said "He is the real criminal! We had undergone a postmortem again then we find some nail scratches at back of her neck which contains tobacco pesticides. And also, he again filed the case after five months after her death about her daughter that his wife was killed and daughter was missing. Then the postmortem reports are cleared that Mr. Sharma killed his own wife". That's a good thing the real criminal was caught but what about the girl where is she? Did she was kidnaped by Kalyan or anyone else if it is done so why?....
